In 2019, for the first edition, 400 women had participated in "A Day for themselves"^[?] at the national level, giving rise in particular to the publication of a book gathering portraits and testimonies of the participants published in Editions Alternatives (Gallimard) in last October. In the corridors of the various places invested in 2019, several women spontaneously shared their testimonies on what brings them this day-long parenthesis: "Today, we are the queens! "If I am good with myself, I am good with my children. "It gave me strength to take care of myself." » "This parenthesis allowed 400 women to regain self-confidence and move forward. When they left they were different. They felt important, women and beautiful. This is why it seemed important to us to repeat this operation. Houria Tareb, National Secretary of the Secours populaire.

"With this second edition, we mark the continuity of our commitment in favor of women in precarious situations. We have seen how this day, which restores a part of self-confidence, can be a source of energy. Antoine Arnault, LVMH. Source : Secours Populaire.
